

Latin American and Caribbean Studies Concentration Checklist

Students in any major interested in developing a specialization in Latin America or the Caribbean may earn a concentration in Latin American and Caribbean Studies by successfully attaining the intermediate level of either Spanish (through SPAN 202) or French (through FREN 202). They must also complete six units as follows: two of five core courses, three electives, and a capstone Independent Study approved by the program coordinators. No more than two courses from the student's major may apply to the concentration and no more than three courses can be taken in the same discipline.
